The five participants of the Cur8 blended learning course had developed learning projects to enhance and transfer their knowledge in an area of critical content curation. They were all eager to share their knowledge and skills with the rest of the team in the two companies blinc and BUPNET.

The desire for more knowledge sharing and upskilling within the team has been a recurring concern over the past few years. Due to the heavy workload of various projects, this was often forgotten. That's when the idea of creating a long-term and sustainable initiative to share knowledge and upskill the team on topics related to critical content curation came to fruition. The team decided to create a series of small knowledge bites, appropriately named "blink – Knowledge in the blink of an eye", as a way to provide valuable and engaging content around working life for busy professionals under time pressure and intense deadlines.

Topics have been curated by the five educators and presented in condensed training modules in either English or German (whichever language participants are more comfortable with). As well as improving knowledge and skills, the learning project also aimed to strengthen relationships between the teams.

The blink offer was very well received and each of the sessions was attended by an average of 10 participants. The CPD initiative also aimed to strengthen relationships between the teams and addressed all Cur8 principles. It involved 30 CVET trainers/Learning and Development Professionals in blinc and BUPNET.

The team is now working on new topics. They are also inviting colleagues to suggest and even teach topics. They want the CPD offer to be one that is supported and nurtured by everyone.

We can certainly consider the introduction of the CPD offer at blinc and BUPNET as good practice. Not only does it provide a platform for knowledge sharing and upskilling, but it also helps strengthen relationships between the teams.
